

The NHS England 10 year plan sets out a radical vision for Health and Social Care. At its heart is an aspiration first proposed in the Wanless Report (2004) to build a Health and Social Care system where prevention of ill health is a core foundation alongside delivering excellent, treatment and care when it is needed. This may be the largest and most radical strategic reform in the history of the health and social care. However, the leadership required to deliver this radical vision differs fundamentally from traditional models of heroic leadership.

- Understand the national vision for health and social care and the implications for your service.
- Discover the nature of system leadership for a radically different health and social care system with prevention at its heart.
- Understand how professional leadership needs to change to ensure operational success.
- Learn how Public Health is playing a greater role in creating the foundations for health and wellbeing
- Hear case studies of how social prescribing can be delivered at scale to maintain health, improve quality of life and prevent emergency admissions.

Actively participate in a series of Think Tanks, where you will work collaboratively with leading experts to develop the vision of a Health and Social care system based on the determinants of health.

Introducing the Centre for Leadership in Health and Social Care

The Centre for Leadership in Health and Social Care (CfL) is a long established centre of excellence in the field of leadership management and development. We work in partnership with many health and social care organisations across the UK and internationally to provide staff with leadership development opportunities.

Our students consistently report more confidence to operate successfully in the current health and social care environment. Most see their careers progress significantly as a result of studying with us.

Investing for immediate impact and long term improvement

It is not only the individual student who benefits from participation in our courses: your organisation directly benefits too.

Our courses can play a vital role in your organisation's talent management programmes, increasing overall leadership capacity, and developing the next generation of leaders for your organisation.

Individual and service performance improvements begin as soon as you start our course. Every piece of work you do on our programmes focuses on "real world" service improvement issues giving you the opportunity to, enhance your knowledge of evidence-based leadership and management theory, and actively practice your leadership skills, to develop the skills you require to lead more effectively in your organisation.

Through engaging in our "real world" assignments you therefore actively improve service delivery throughout the programme: solving organisational problems; developing service provision; strengthening teamwork; enhancing motivation, commitment and effort; and improving service user outcomes.

And, as you grow as a leader, the impact of your growing capabilities lead to even greater outcomes for both your organisation and service users.

Introducing the Faculty of Health and Wellbeing

The Faculty of Health and Wellbeing is one of Sheffield Hallam University's four faculties. We are the largest health and social care education provider in England providing an outstanding learning experience for almost 9,000 students. Our work encompasses biosciences and chemistry, allied health professions, nursing and midwifery, social work, physician associates, leadership and management, and sport - supported by around 600 academic, research and professional service staff.

There are five academic departments in the faculty:

- Department of Nursing and Midwifery
- Department of Allied Health Professions
- Department of Biosciences and Chemistry
- Academy of Sport and Physical Activity
- Department of Social Work, Social Care and Community Studies.

We focus on education and training for students who can go on to be professionals in health and social care, sport and biomedical sciences. We also supply excellent research, training and expertise for a host of external clients, organisations and businesses.

We are leaders in the use of state-of-the-art technology to support our teaching. For example, using augmented reality -computerised applications that simulate a variety of physiological process and real-life complex health and care scenarios that require integrated solution-focused approaches from learners. We have extensive sports facilities at the Sheffield Hallam Sports Park and the Sheffield Hallam City Athletics Stadium.

Our approach to partnership working is important to both our education and research and we are particularly proud of our excellent relationships with local Health and Social care providers.

Our New Curriculum

An integrated approach to training the health and social care workforce of the future

Sheffield Hallam University are key contributors regionally and nationally to innovative changes occurring across the health and social care landscape, through our education, research and knowledge exchange activities to enhance the quality of people's lives.

In recognition of the changing workforce needs of our Health and Social Care partners, the Faculty of Health and Wellbeing has proactively redesigned its health and social care education provision across 11 professional groups to create a distinctive and applied curriculum that prepares graduates for their working lives. Hallam prepares the graduate workforce to innovate and collaborate, to meet the needs of the public and to lead and innovate across service boundaries. Taking advantage of our unique position, we have created innovative learning experiences where students learn with, from and about other professionals throughout their courses to collaborate, thrive, connect and enhance their employability. Being the largest health and social care provider in England, allows us to bring the challenges facing the whole system to life in the classroom, so learning is in context: where services operate together.

We continue to explore opportunities for learning across nursing and midwifery; biosciences and chemistry; allied health; social work; physician associates; leadership and management and sport, alongside education and more recently policing. No other university offers this much diversity in its undergraduate pre-qualifying education. We co-create courses in close collaboration with service users and employers, ensuring that the professionals of tomorrow are fully prepared to meet challenges throughout their diverse careers.

Our distinctive applied curriculum enables students to develop great team working skills, enhanced awareness to the many contributions professionals make to the care of service users/patients/families and communities. Each professional graduate uses a philosophy of co-production to always act with service users to understand, "what matters to you?" This approach is contributes to our graduates being highly employable, enhancing what it means to be a Hallam graduate.
